The Work of the Homeland Association for the Encouragement of Touring in Great Britain

THE Homeland Association Limited, was founded in 1896 with the view to collecting and publishing accurate descriptions of the towns and countryside of Great Britain, the Motherland of our Empire. It has therefore been in active existence for more than thirty years, and has distributed during that time hundreds of thousands of the now well-known Homeland Handbooks and Handy Guides and a large number of useful books of a more ambitious character of Topography, Architecture, Ecclesiology, and British Antiquities. Its desire is to help our fellow countrymen to travel in, to appreciate intelligently, and to study their own country and its story, in other words to encourage knowledge of, and love for, our native Britain. As the late Sir Rider Haggard wrote in 1904, 'I am quite certain that few aims could be worthier.'

The work of the Association serves a special purpose in translating for the benefit of the layman the stores of specialized knowledge in the Transactions of the Antiquarian Societies of Great Britain, and by so doing is arousing a very real interest in sound local topography.

The Homeland Association is not supported in this valuable educational work by public money, but has to stand or fall by the measure of its services. Its work can be greatly helped by readers making the publications known to their friends. Booksellers particularly can give it invaluable assistance by keeping a stock of its books and drawing the attention of their customers to its undertakings. Its work confidently appeals to the best instincts of all lovers of Great Britain.
